 I believe all of our actions were legal open market actions, using the protocol as designed, even if the development team did not fully anticipate all the consequences of setting parameters the way they are.

Avraham Eisenberg @avi_eisen · Oct 15, 2022
 Unfortunately, the exchange this took place on, Mango Markets, became insolvent as a result, with the insurance fund being insufficient to cover all liquidations. This led to other users being unable to access their funds.

Avraham Eisenberg @avi_eisen · Oct 15, 2022
 To remedy the situation, I helped negotiate a settlement agreement with the insurance fund with the goal of making all users whole as soon as possible as well as recapitalizing the exchange.

Avraham Eisenberg @avi_eisen · Oct 15, 2022
 This is similar to how auto deleveraging works on exchanges such as Binance and Bitmex, clawing back some profits from profitable traders in order to ensure all users funds are protected.

Avraham Eisenberg @avi_eisen · Oct 15, 2022
 As a result of this agreement, once the Mango team finishes processing, all users will be able to access their deposits in full with no loss of funds.

 There are lot of people that say "wow, good job" but you're taking the money of little investors (retail).
 These are regular people that you're hurting and you're saying 'it's okay'. It's like being a self-righteous Mashinsky or Do Kwon.

In this thread, I will do my best to give an overview on what is going on with Fortress right now and how, I believe, its doxed lead developer is actively abusing his powers to take as much money from it as he possibly can Spoofing, insider trading, and market manipulation are also "highly-profitable trading strategies". They're also unethical and illegal. Best of luck defending yourself, in the courtroom and from ripped-off users of Mango. The consequences will catch up to you.

Regardless of the legality, I'll offer a friendly suggestion. You have rare talent. If you spend that talent building instead of playing zero sum (or negative) games, you'll have a lot more pride in what you've done with your life in a decade and two.

2/ I say this as someone who's played a lot of zero sum games - poker, trading, etc. Wish I had shifted to building (in the broadest sense) a decade earlier. Making money is cool. Making money doing things you're proud of is a lot cooler.

To all other developers reading this thread, please do not follow this person's precedent.

If you find a way to drain a protocol to insolvency, please reach out to the dev team and responsibly disclose.

Regardless of "code is law" this is not ok, and pushes web3 backwards.

Rebranding market manipulation that resulted in a protocol's insolvency as a "highly profitable trading strategy" is a bold move

While Mango should have had more risk mitigation processes in place, coercing a $47M bounty from the protocol seems less than ethical

What Is Manipulation?

Market manipulation is conduct designed to deceive investors by controlling or artificially affecting the price of securities.^[1] Manipulation is illegal in most cases, but it can be difficult for regulators and other authorities to detect and prove.

Market manipulation may involve factually false statements as well, but it always seeks to influence prices in order to mislead other market participants.^[2]

 As an FYI, traders who commit market manipulation (both civil and criminal violations) also use tools as they're designed.

Market manipulation laws aren't about exploiting something but rather the offender's intent when trading.

This was a "trading strategy" like Putin's war is a "special op" 🤔 It's the new "might is right". Instead of "I'll take what's yours as I have a bigger gun" it's "I'll take what's yours because I have a bigger brain." Left unprosecuted, this would be a dangerous precedent.

Code is not law. People keep saying it is but everytime this assumption had a net negative outcome towards web3. You should be charged as you exploited 110M$+ and then took 47M$ bounty which is too much, you could have helped team by only keeping a small portion of the bounty.

Good luck - you've just admitted that you were behind this - as to whether what you did was legal or not - I'll leave it to court but you could have received way more respect if you had returned 90% and kept 10% as a bounty. You could have gotten away scot free.

The longer that acts like this aren't prosecuted and instead allowed to happen unpunished the slower the adoption of crypto will be. Just because you can do something in a system doesn't at all make it right.
